Reviews

This type of publication is every thing and helped me seeking ahead and much more. It usually fails to charge too much. It is extremely difficult to leave it before concluding, once you begin to read the book.

Ever since France led the way by adopting her original and highly efficient rapid-fire field material, other nations have been deeply interested in the important question of field artillery rearmament. Since the adoption of the French gun in 1897 constructors elsewhere have succeeded in solving the mechanical difficulties at first thought impracticable of solution and many experiments towards improving the design of the long recoil rapidfire gun have been made, so that it has now been proved that a true rapid-fire field gun can be obtained. Discussion of the merits of the various systems that have been developed and numerous competitive tests of different models have been thorough and searching. As a result, a number of the principal Powers have definitely decided on a new material with gun recoiling on the carriage. Several others are yet conducting trials looking toward the selection of the most satisfactory type in the near future, and only a few have not yet come to any decision in regard to their field artillery. In the following lines endeavor is made to give a review of the present status of the field artillery question in all the various countries. ENGLAND. At present England has 18 batteries of Ehrhardt rapid-fire guns. These guns are of 3-inch calibre, firing a projectile weighing 14 pounds 15 ounces. The carriage has a hydraulic buffer with spring recuperators for returning the piece in battery, and a telescopic trail. But beginning...
