Excerpt: .It is not always with such mothers that the supply of milk is limited in quantity, but it is often inferior in quality when it is abundant. Among the varied food a mother of this kind eats, there will be every few days something that she does not digest well--or as she may say, that disagrees with her. This influences for the time the quality of the milk secreted, producing intestinal difficulty in a feeble child, and when repeated again and again eventually produces an irritated condition of the child's digestive organs, through which its vitality is in some degree exhausted, and it falls a ready prey to disease. When had the mother been endowed with a better digestive apparatus her child would have continued strong enough to resist the attack. This condition of the mother's digestion should therefore have full consideration...
